From Placement Convener Desk

Mr. D. P. Negi
Assistant Professor

This is a great pleasure for me to present before you the highly determined and professionally competent group of Social Work students of the batch of 2016-2018. Imparted with continuous sensitivity the students of the current batch have developed as thoughtful and dedicated social service professionals, ever willing to take on the rightful place in the diverse spheres offered to them. The two year duration of the post graduate course in social work i.e. M.A in Social Work provides to have a wide-ranging and rigorous groundwork in theoretical discourses as well multiple engagements at sites of practicum. The course curriculum offered to them is an extensive mix of core mandatory courses and elective courses based on evolving issues and concern. Field work is the lifeline of the social work curriculum which gives the students an opportunity to integrate the pedagogy into the practicum. Thus the students are trained in mounting and exploiting social work skills, are of important value to their ensuing performance as professionals in welfare, development and corporate sectors. The field work programme contains of the components on orientation programme, concurrent field work, rural camp, and block placement, supportive field instructions, skill labs, seminar presentation etc. On behalf of the faculty, staff members and students, I would be happy to welcome you to our campus for appealing our students to assist your organization.

Mr. D. P. Negi, Assistant Professor

M.A. Social Work

The primary aim of the Social Work Programme is to prepare students for professional practice by training them to probe and understand the nature of human need, potentialities of services and interventions that are appropriate and effective. The curriculum objectives are directed towards equipping students with considerable knowledge, professional skills, values and attitudes appropriate to social work practice. There is also combined effort of grooming the personality of the learner into developing a mature outlook alongside the acquisition of knowledge and skills.

This course provides no simplistic answers or prescriptions, but envisages preparing students to challenge the personal and confront the issues of poverty, discrimination, and oppression that adversely impact the opportunities, resources, and capacities of people in their environment. Social work faculty, students and field practitioners strive together to work towards creating self-determination, interdependence, respect for diversity and antidiscriminatory environment within the society.

Field Work Practicum

Concurrent field work

Concurrent field work at the Department of Social Work is the essential learning module of the two-year master's programme and runs concurrently with class room teaching of theoretical concepts. It is a credited field work component and students attend field work in different villages for two days a week. Field work settings offer real life knowledge to the students and give them hands on involvement of working with people. Students develop their professional as well as individual skills in the course of elevating the lives of people they come in contact with. Students also get a chance to apply their insight and skills in their respective fields under the supervision of the department and faculty supervisors.

Block Placement

After the completion of the 2 Semester the students gets the opportunity of having two block placement in next year, students undergo block field work training for a period of 30 days. The purpose of block placement is to provide students a level of pre-employment experience. It broadens the perspective of the students and enables them to experience handling of professional responsibilities.

Block Placement

The rural camp is one of the most anticipated field work activity planned by the department targeting at holistic specialized development of the students. The rural camp provides students an exposure to rural life and enables them to plan, organize and implement relevant programmes. It is an integral part of practice learning and makes field work a complete experience.

Why Recruit 'Our Students'?

The batch represents the cosmic mix of students from 9 different states constituting a mini India in terms of the texture, cross-sectional dialogue and inclusive experience. The students hail from the Northernmost state of Jammu and Kashmir to Southernmost state of Kerala. The critical experience of the university learning is not only what one learns inside the classroom but what one learns through the peer learning, sharing of the experience and the exposure one has that is rooted, in part, in the subjective background of the individual person as well as the theoretical understanding one draws from the classroom learning. In this context, our batch was very lucky as the amount of subjective and objective understanding of 9 different states has led to the holistic understanding of the same problem through 9 different lenses. The total number of students in 2016-2018 batch are 17 comprising 7 females and 10 male students, shunning the myth (in India) as well as the problem (in West). The students with the vibrant, innovative, progressive, and dynamic synergy of education based on the all-encompassing learning with the special emphases on the rural community viewing the integration of theory in practice as the cornerstone of the social work education. The concept of sustainability with the accumulated indigenous knowledge of the rural community has been the temporal part of the 2-year's education of the students at the Department of Social Work, Central University of Rajasthan. The student had the opportunity to learning and interact with the local community through the concurrent field work programs as well as the chance to observe the institutional interventional programs through the Block Field Work. The two – year's MA Social Work program at the Department of Social Work, Central University of Rajasthan has been monumental in the kind of transformation that is required to equip the students with the knowledge, skills and values best suited for the meaningful and professional social worker.
